Just a few incendiary bombs were dropped during this raid, some of which were retrieved.

On Sunday 2\textsuperscript{nd} April 1916 there was a major explosion at the munitions works at Uplees. This was the result of carelessness, not an enemy attack. At first, 200 were reported killed.

East Kent Gazette, April 8\textsuperscript{th} 1916
The number of casualties reported was later reduced to 106, and the report on 29th April was worded to suggest that the majority of the casualties were rescue workers or casual sightseers, implying that there was no danger in working at the site.

East Kent Gazette, 29th April 1916